BATHROOM PASSES

During my tenure as a high school teacher, I concluded that few students who requested to go to the bathroom during class actually visited the bathroom when they left the classroom. So, to stop the flood of students wanting to "go to the bathroom," I created a bathroom pass.

How it works:

- *Students get a new bathroom pass each grading period that gives them two bathroom trips.
- *When they use their pass to go to the bathroom, I use a hole punch to punch out one of the stars.
- *If they lose their pass OR I've already punched out both of their stars, they cannot go.
- *On the last day of the grading period, students who have not used their bathroom passes turn them into me. As an incentive for not using the pass, I give students the choice of a free homework grade (I turn a zero into a 100) or extra credit on a quiz OR test from that grading period.
 - *You can choose the amount of extra credit to give based on your individual classes. I typically give 5 points to my Honors/AP classes and 10 points to my standard or lower level classes.

Exceptions:

I do grant students exceptions for medical conditions and extreme circumstances. This pass is not intended to punish students who truly need to use the bathroom, but to discourage students from using a trip to the bathroom as a way to check up on friends, wander the halls, etc..

6 Versions:

I've included 6 versions of the passes. The words are the same, but the fonts are different. I use a different pass each grading period to prevent students from accumulating multiple passes. If you are worried about students attempting to duplicate the passes, you can use decorative cut scissors that cut paper in various designs instead of straight lines.
